Happy Feet returns home

Last June, an exhausted and hungry emperor penguin was found on the beach in Peka Peka, New Zealand's North Island. It was lost and thousands of kilometres from its home in the Antarctic, where penguins normally live. Because it was so weak, it was taken to Wellington Zoo. Penguins eat snow to cool themselves down but this one had eaten a lot of sand thinking that it was snow. The vets removed the sand from its stomach and the staff gave it food and took good care of it. It became so popular that the amount of visitors at the zoo almost doubled and people nicknamed it Happy Feet like the film.

After spending several weeks at the zoo, Happy Feet is now well enough to return home. Last Monday it was loaded on a boat in a specially designed box to keep it cool and comfortable. It will be released on Campbell Island, 2,000 km from the Antarctic. According to researchers, the island is within the normal living area of emperor penguins, so Happy Feet will be able to swim back home and hopefully meet some penguins it knows on its way. It will carry a GPS* tracker so that researchers and the public can follow its journey at www.wellingtonzoo.com

Our score

Kronos and Patti Smith got Polar Prize

Polar Music Prize was founded more than twenty years ago by Stikkan Andersson, a publisher, lyricist and manager of ABBA. It was named after Andersson’s record label, Polar Records. In 1989 Stikkan donated 42 million SEK to establish the world’s biggest music prize. The prize is among the most highly regarded music prizes in the world, awarded to persons, groups, or institutions for extraordinary musical achievements. The award ceremony takes place in Stockholm every year and the first laureates were Sir Paul McCartney and the Baltic States in 1992. The Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania were awarded one million each to establish a performing rights organization like STIM* in Sweden.

This year’s laureates are Kronos Quartet, an American string quartet founded in 1973, and Patti Smith. Kronos play a wide range of music from folk, experimental and medieval music to film sound tracks, jazz and tango. They have also worked together with musicians like Björk, the Romanian gypsy band Taraf de Haidouks, Tom Waits, David Bowie and Nelly Furtado.

Patti Smith, an American poet and musician, became an important member of the New York punk movement in 1975 with her first album Horses, a mixture of punk and verbal poetry, and she was nicknamed the Godmother of Punk. The following years she recorded three more albums: Radio Ethiopia, Easter and Wave. Easter included one of her best known songs, Because the Night, which she wrote together with Bruce Springsteen. In 1979 she moved to Detroit, got married, stopped performing and became a full-time mother. It took nine years before she released next album – Dream of Life. When her husband and two of her closest friends died, she decided to move back to New York. In 1995 she released Gone Again and toured briefly with Bob Dylan. Except recording, performing, art projects and writing, she has always been strongly involved in social issues and in many human rights organizations. She was a speaker and singer at the first protest meeting against the Iraq war in 2002, and in 2006 she performed two new protest songs – Qana, which is about the Israeli bombing of the village of Qana in Lebanon, and Without Chains about Murat Kurnaz, a Turkish citizen born and raised in Germany, imprisoned in Guantamo Bay for four years. While touring with her band, she keeps on writing and creating art projects. In addition to her ten albums, she has written several books and Just Kids, published in January last year, won the National Book Award. She got the Polar Prize for “demonstrating how much rock’n’roll there is in poetry and how much poetry there is in rock’n’roll”.
